

BENJAMIN HARRISON HOME

1204 North Delaware Street, Indianapolis

Built in 1874-1875, when Benjamin Harrison was a prominent Indianapolis lawyer, this large Italianate brick house was his home until his death in 1901. Here he accepted the Republican party's nomination for the presidency, here he planned his campaign, and here he returned after serving as the nation's 23rd president. Now a museum, the restored house contains a number of original family pieces.
